PREFACE.

The compilation of a Biographical Catalogue of the Matriculates of Haverford College was undertaken by the Alumni Association in 1894, when a committee of its members was appointed for the purpose.

The collection of the necessary data was at once begun. To all matriculates or their representatives a letter was sent, enclosing a carefully prepared question sheet. The failure of many of those addressed to respond to the committee's inquiries necessitated another communication. After prosecuting the work for more than two years, it became evident to the committee that the task was of such magnitude as to require expert assistance in order successfully to complete the work. In 1897 the services of Professor Allen C. Thomas as editor were fortunately secured. Through his long connection with Haverford College, Professor Thomas was peculiarly fitted to undertake the work. To him the thanks of the committee are due for the great interest shown and the painstaking care used in endeavoring to make the volume complete and accurate. Through his untiring efforts during the past three years much information has been secured which it had previously seemed impossible to find. The records in the following pages are incomplete only in cases where the matriculates have died or have been lost sight of, or where repeated requests for information have been ignored and it has been found impossible to supply it from college and meeting records or genealogies.

The thanks of the committee are also due to President Sharpless for permission to use the College records, and for constant sympathy and support of the project in hand.

It is hoped that this record of the men who have gone forth from Haverford College may prove a valuable contribution to the history of our Alma Mater.

EDITOR'S NOTE.

In the preparation of this Catalogue great pains have been taken to secure accurate information. In a few cases it has been impossible to trace old students; but in many cases those whose addresses have been known have failed to reply to repeated requests, and their records have been made up from what data could be secured from other sources.

The names have been arranged by classes; that is to say, the name of a matriculate is put under the year in which his class graduated. Without doubt, some will be surprised to see themselves ranked with those whom they have never known, or of whom, perhaps, they have never heard; but, on the whole, this method of arrangement seemed to be the best.

For about twenty years after the opening of the institution the division into classes was very loosely observed. Apparently, students were not ranked according to any definite system. No catalogues were published until 1852. Lists of students were from time to time printed in the Managers' Reports, but irregularly; and these lists were not always divided into classes; while from 1843 to 1852, with a single exception, no lists whatever were published. These facts have made it exceedingly difficult to place some of the matriculates, especially those who did not complete the course. Records have been made up, therefore, from grade books, ledgers, etc.

Previous to 1877, the only degree conferred upon undergraduates was that of Bachelor of Arts; in 1877 the degree of Bachelor of Science was added, and in 1887 the degree of Bachelor of Engineering. Since 1891, however, the degrees of Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Science have been the only ones conferred.

It remains for the editor to acknowledge the great assistance given him by the active members of the Catalogue Committee, two of whom have most kindly read the proof-sheets. Acknowledgments are also due to a number of the Alumni who have given information of much value; among these, Robert Bowne, '42, of New York City, and Mark Brooke, '96, of Radnor, Pa., should be specially mentioned. Thanks are also due to Dr. Edward T. Tucker, of New Bedford, Mass., and Gilbert Cope, of West Chester, Pa., for information most kindly furnished.

SKETCH

HISTORY OF HAVERFORD COLLEGE.

Haverford College, opened in 1833, was founded by members of the Society of Friends, who wished to establish an institution conducted in accordance with their religious opinions, and offering advantages "for instruction in the higher branches of learning, combined with a religious care over the morals and manners of the students."

The full course of study was to occupy not less than four years, and was to include "English Literature, Mathematics, Natural History, Natural, Intellectual and Moral Philosophy, the Ancient Languages and Ancient Literature." Opportunities for instruction in the principal modern languages were also to be afforded.

It will be seen that, though the modesty or special views of those interested prevented them from calling the institution a college, collegiate instruction was given from the start. This is also shown by the State documents, which rank the institution as one giving collegiate instruction.

In 1856 the managers obtained a charter, giving Haverford the name and full powers of a college. Students who had received diplomas from Haverford School were subsequently granted the degree of Bachelor of Arts, upon application and payment of fees.

The experience of Haverford College has not been unlike that of other denominational colleges. There have been in its history periods of great depression, when, had it not been for the unselfish support of a few noble-hearted persons, the college would have been closed. Indeed, at one time the institution was temporarily suspended, from 1845 to 1848. Re-opened in the latter year under more liberal regulations, it has continued to offer its advantages to wider circles of young men.

From time to time Haverford has received liberal gifts and bequests; without these it would have been impossible for it to have been carried on. It was not, however, until 1897, when the corporation came into possession of the munificent bequest of Jacob P. Jones, of Philadelphia, amounting to about a million of dollars, that the college was placed upon a permanent, substantial pecuniary foundation.

Haverford aims in its religious influence to inculcate the simple truths of Christianity.

NOTE.—For a full account of the history of the college see "History of Haverford College, 1832–92." Philadelphia, 1892.
